A limited number of GRANTS FOR EXPENSES are available from the Conference for Federal Studies for its members to attend and participate in the conference on the Politics of Intergovernmental Relations in August. A full description of the Conference begins on Page 2 of this issue, including the papers to be presented and the format.

To apply for these grants, write a letter to the Conference Coordinator, Dr. Stephen Schechter, Center for the Study of Federalism, Temple University, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19122. In the letter include your present position and rank, your educational background and degrees, a brief description of your interests (teaching and/or research) in the field of intergovernmental relations in federal systems, and how attendance at the conference will benefit your institution. Also enclose a proposed budget for your travel and incidental expenses. Letters should be received at the Center by July 31, 1973.

THE POLITICS OF INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS IN FEDERAL SYSTEMS: URBAN PERSPECTIVES

CONFERENCE THEME

Local systems are woven into the social and political fabric of all federal systems. Federal and state (provincial, laender, cantonal, or republic) governments -- the services they perform, the laws they enforce, the issues they create, and the interests and values they represent -- may meet in local arenas and local interests and issues may be played out in wider arenas. The central concern of this conference is to examine how this "system of systems" operates in different federal systems and different regions within federal systems and with what results. Papers will be presented on particular federal systems, and particular comparative topics, and reports will be presented on the activities of a number of major institutions engaged in comparative research.

CONFERENCE QUESTIONS

1. What is the nature and relative strength of the formal and informal ties (constitutional, political, administrative, economic, professional) which link, or even bind, localities or particular local interests to the overarching federal system?
2. How have these ties shaped and been shaped by the mobilization and management of resources and interests in local arenas? Have these ties been used as levers to gain access to wider regional and national arenas? In what ways? By which groups or over what issues? With what effects?
3. How have these ties shaped and been shaped by emerging trends and patterns of federal-state-local relations and emerging roles of federal, state and local governments?
4. How have these ties been affected by, and how have they been shaped to respond to, the processes of urbanization and metropolitanization in all federal systems and the patterning of regional and communal ties in multi-cultural federal systems? How effective has this response been? In what ways could it be more effective?
5. What are the social and political implications for the study of local systems and the federal systems within which they operate?

CONFERENCE FORMAT

One group of participants will be invited to present short papers which relate these questions to their present research on particular federal systems. Papers should contain recent information, specific examples, and a bibliography of the most relevant academic studies, government reports, and data sources. Utilizing this format should provide each participant with useful summaries of the research findings, references, and reports on the most recent events and developments in a broad range of federal systems.

A second group of participants will be invited to present short papers on comparative topics which provide a summary of major research findings and implications for both federal and urban studies.

A third group of participants will be invited to present oral reports on relevant comparative projects of their institution.
